The UK – A Crèche for Adult Children

A Nation Built on Dependency

Britain today cannot feed itself, clothe itself, heat its homes, or power its industry without leaning on other nations. Our borders are insecure, our streets feel unsafe, our economy flatlines while public finances teeter on collapse. Every day we borrow more than we earn. Politicians call this “growth.” In reality, it is debt dressed up as progress and prosperity.

The Social Monster We Created

This hasn’t happened over night, for decades, politicians have promised rights, entitlements, and welfare. They’ve told us we are special, that prosperity can be ours for free. Over time, we believed them. We became hooked on comfort, convinced that success was automatic, that time, effort and sacrifice was unnecessary.

The result is a society of adult children — grown bodies with infant minds. Today large swathes of our population consume, demand, and vote, but do not contribute. They expect cars, holidays, laptops, and healthcare as basic entitlements, funded by someone else. Any attempt to remove the “cake & ice-cream” is met with toddler tantrums, kicking, screaming and feet stamping.

Education Without Reality

This mindset begins in the classroom. Schools prioritise wellbeing over rigour. Children are taught compliance, not competition. They are shielded from consequence, told life will always be safe, easy, and happy. Economics, sacrifice, and responsibility are stripped from the curriculum.

But the damage runs deeper. They are not being mentally prepared for the rigours of life, for competition within our society, nor do they understand competition between societies. They leave the safe haven of school and the state believing the world will treat them kindly, only to discover that life is not free, that simple things they have taken for granted are expensive, and that other people are competing ruthlessly for advantage.

The shock is profound: rejection and failure seems catastrophic, the responsibility of having to compete feels unbearable and unfair. This is why we are seeing a rising mental health and wellbeing crises. It is not simply personal fragility — it is the direct result of an education system that trains children for comfort instead of resilience, that replaces reality with fantasy.

Voting Without Responsibility

But, the problem does not end at school. It extends into the ballot box. Those raised to believe life is free now vote to keep it that way. Policies are shaped not by responsibility, but by demands for more comfort, more debt, more illusion.

Put children in charge of your home and chaos follows. Put adult children in charge of a nation, and collapse follows. This intellectually infantile process is eroding the very structure of our society.

Unscrupulous Politicians: Feeding the Beast

This system doesn't grow by accident. It is fed deliberately. Politicians and parties have learned that if they use other people's income and wealth to fund entitlements, they can keep the population hooked. Welfare, subsidies, and borrowed comforts are not generosity — they are tools of control.

To them, feeding and encouraging dependency is more important than economic prosperity, than financial prudence or even protecting democracy. As long as the population remains needy, votes are secured, power is maintained, and the illusion continues. The cycle is simple: take from the productive, give to the non-productive, the entitled, call it fairness, and reap the rewards at the ballot box.

This is not leadership. It is manipulation. It is the deliberate growth of an adult children society — a societal crèche for a population trained to demand more, while those who have developed this system, the saviour politicians, deliver just enough to stay in power.

Breeding Without Responsibility

The illusion doesn't stop at consumption. It extends to reproduction. Adult children are breeding at no cost to themselves, funded by others. Welfare, housing, healthcare, and subsidies cover the expenses, while the productive members of society foot the bill.

This is not family building rooted in responsibility. It is entitlement extended across generations. Children are raised into the same cycle of dependency, taught from birth that wealth is a right, money is free, and debt can be infinite. The result is a growing population trained to demand more, while contributing less.

The danger is clear: when entitlement is inherited, the burden compounds. A society that rewards breeding without responsibility is not investing in its future — it is multiplying its fragility.

The Psychology of Entitlement

At the heart of this illusion lies a dangerous belief:

- Money is free. Printing, borrowing, and redistributing are seen as endless fountains.
- Wealth is a right. Success is expected, not earned; entitlement replaces effort.
- Debt can be infinite. Borrowing is treated as harmless, as though future generations will never have to pay..

This mindset is corrosive. It erodes responsibility, blinds society to scarcity, and convinces millions that prosperity is automatic. In truth, it is nothing more than a fantasy sustained by debt and manipulation.

The Cost of Illusion

The damages are everywhere:

- Social contracts broken — fairness eroded by entitlement.
- Finances strained — borrowing disguised as growth.
- Ecosystem weakened — dependency on others for food, energy, and industry.
- Mental fragility rising — adults unprepared for competition or scarcity.
- Global blindness — no understanding of competition between societies.
- Generational burden — breeding without responsibility multiplies dependency.
- Politics infantilised — voters demanding comfort, leaders delivering illusion.

This is not prosperity. It is fragility disguised as progress.

A Return to Reality

Real growth is not debt-fuelled busy work. It is:

- Competition — rewarding productivity, exposing inefficiency.
- Choice — empowering individuals to act, not wait for handouts.
- Freedom — removing the shackles of dependency and over-regulation.
- Responsibility — pairing rights with duties, contribution, and consequence.
- Resilience — preparing minds for competition, scarcity, and the reality of finite resources.
- Global awareness — understanding that nations compete, and only those prepared will endure.

This is not a sermon, it's an invitation.

- To reflect on yourself — on whether you are living as a contributor or as an adult child.
- To reflect on who you are — whether your resilience is real, or whether it has been built on borrowed illusion.
- To reflect on the society you are a member of — a society that rewards entitlement, multiplies dependency, and risks collapse if reality is ignored.

The question is not theoretical, it's personal. Each of us must decide whether we will continue to live in illusion, or whether we will choose responsibility, competition, resilience, and consequence.

Make no mistake, if left unchecked, the continued development of an intellectually infantile population will be the downfall of this nation. The choice is stark: continue feeding the illusion, or return to reality. Adult children cannot build a future, only those who reflect, accept responsibility, and embrace competition can.
